THIS ALLIGATOR CLIMBS FENCES.

It happened a couple of weeks ago, but as the oner wasn't locked up, but only dumped back into the pool, the story wasn't told till yesterday. It was 6 in the morning, and Policeman Sam Smith was on his way to post when he saw the alligator lying in the wet grass by the walk. The alligator was blinking his small glittering eyes, and his long black tall.

Smith grabbed him firmly by the tail, and lifted him clear off the ground. He carried him in this way to the pool where his dozen brothers and sisters are, the other policeman meantime keeping his club busy between the suspended head of the alligator and Mr. Smith, lest the former succeed in getting his jaws mixed up with the latter's legs.

Only a few days ago the same alligator was again found loose, very near the same spot. This time it was Pete Shannon, who looks after the birds, who found him. Shannon couldn't be induced to touch the brute with his hands but managed to loop a rope around his shoulders and drag him back. The keepers say the alligator climbs over the fence, which, though four feet or more high, is netted so as to make footholds. The place where the alligators are kept is only temporary, while the hippopotamus's tank and other summer quarters are being prepared.

The fence inclosing the prairie dogs is curved inward at the top, so that, even though the animals climb to the top, they are then balked. Buth a fence around the alligators' enclosure would be equally effective. A keeper said he never heard of an alligator climbing a fence before, but the enclosure has been carefully examined, and this is the only explanation of the animal's escape.

The fastest passage previous to this was made by the Umbria of the same line, and the time was 6 days, 4 hours, and 42 minutes. The Umbria left Queenstown at 1:48 P. M. May 29, 1887, and arrived at the lightship at 1:55 P. M. June 4. Previous to that the Etruria had been the champion steamer, with a record but a few minutes slower than the Umbria's. The officers and crew of the Etruria are now in high feather, for they feel that they have opened a gap between the record of their boat and that we are not saying 'and it was a bad week for sailing. too,' " said First Officer Secombe yesterday, as he looked proudly at his log book.

"We have always said that if the Etruria had chance she could break the record. On this trip we had the chance, and we did it."

The Etruria broke not only the record for the fastest passage, but also the record for the longest distance traversed in one day. The Umbris had that record, too, having run 496 kno's westward in 1887. On Friday the Etruria mp.de 503 knots.

The trip was almost unevenful for the passengers, although the officers and crew had peculiarly hard work on account of loggy weather, which compelled all of them to keep sharp watch and long hours. The Etruria passed Queenstown lightship at 1:25 P. M. May 17, and in the first 24 hours made 455 knots. Early in the morning of the 29th a fresh gale aprung up suddenly, blowing from the west. The sea was choppy, and a great deal of water was thrown on deck. It became necessary to slacken speed for two hours. For twelve hours after full speed was resumed the wind sontinued to blow hard from the west; but after that all conditions were favorable to record breaking. In soite of the weather the boat made 458 knots on the second day. On the 30th the Umbria's record of 496 knots was tied and on the 31st the boat recorded 485 knots. On June 1 the wind was brisk from the east, and for many hours the Etruria carried a press of sail. That day's entry in the log of distance covered was 503 knets. Four hundred and fifty-seven knots were made in the last day, and she reached the Sandy Hook har at 1945 A. M. This makes her apparent time 5 days 31 hours 20 minutes and her actual time 6 days 1 hour 55 minutes. The average day's run was 470 knots, or 19,6 an hour. Sails were used only once during the bassage.

Some of the big boat was slowly warped into her borth at the dock the hundred faces at the rail were all smiles, and "Best on record" was more frequently heard than "Hullow, Jim!" or "How are the folks?" Capt. Cook was asked Policeman Smith studied the object for a minute, not sure that his senses were not tricking him. He didn't remember ever having seen an alligator rouning around the walks of the Fark before. Then he picked up a stick and, appreaching cautiously, poked the beast in the ribs. The alligator rolled his wicked eyes, opened his big jaws about a foot, and hissed like a snake, only louder. He was not a big aligator, only about five feet long, but big enough to swallow a kitten or bite off a child's leg. He was an enterprising, healthy fellow, too, judging by the way he moved around and pointed his ugly nose for Mr. Smith's calves, so Mr. Smith summoned another policeman.

The two approached cauticusly. One of them engaged the beast's attention in front, while Smith grabbed him firmly by the tail, and lifted him clear off the ground. He carried him in this way to the pool where his dozen brothers
